It is no accident that Rockefeller chose this very place to realize his vision. As he surveyed the length of the coast he selected the two most perfect beaches, but also the land with the most character. He recognized the opportunity to create golf courses with character, and homesites with expansive views and a benign climate that were all unique to what would become Mauna Kea Resort.

Indeed, those that know Hawaii, and especially those fortunate to live here full time often favor mauka properties – those on the mountain. Breezes tend to keep the
