Live, host, and create in one of the Big Island's most magical regions. This thriving 20-acre ethnobotanical farm is a rare, biocultural kīpuka — a protected pocket of the 'āina preserving native and biodiverse species, lovingly tended for over 40 years. Within this lush tapestry, you'll find an abundance of edible, medicinal, fragrant, and ornamental plants, including cultural staples such as 'ulu (breadfruit), banana, and a wide array of rare and healing botanicals. Exotic fruit trees, native species, and sacred medicinals make this a living archive of Hawai'i's natural abundance.
